

Phones already exist on aircraft for important or necessary communications. Allowing passengers to use cell phones will create an unsurpassed annoyance. Many people talk unduly loudly into their cell phones and force others to listen to their private conversations. It is no longer possible to assume that good manners will prevail in public places. Neither teenagers nor adults can be counted on to keep conversations brief and quiet. I would not want to be trapped next to an incessant cell phone user with no escape for hours. If the use of cell phones is allowed on some carriers, I will certainly avoid those carriers.
